

North Carolina Society of Gastroenterology is committed to building relationships among clinicians, researchers, industry leaders and community stakeholders with a shared goal of improving the gastrointestinal (GI) health of those we serve. The North Carolina Society of Gastroenterology values and respects the diversity of age, ability or disability, culture, ethnicity, geographical location, religion, political ideology along with the sexual and gender identity of its membership. We acknowledge inequities exist in access to GI health care and factors such as bias, both conscious and unconscious, may impede our work. We promote continual discussions to educate ourselves about differences, bias and the delivery of globally competent GI care to all including those who have been historically underserved and/or marginalized.
