

Craig Reed, MD

Dr. Reed completed his undergraduate education at UNC Chapel Hill where he obtained a BS in biology and a minor in Japanese prior to matriculating at Wake Forest School of Medicine. Upon graduation, he was an internal medicine resident and gastroenterology fellow at UNC Hospitals. During fellowship, Dr. Reed completed an additional year of training to specialize in diseases of the esophagus and to complete a master's degree in clinical epidemiology. He subsequently joined the faculty of the UNC division of gastroenterology in 2019. Dr. Reed is a North Carolina native, having been born in Greensboro, and has lived his entire life within the state. He and his wife are parents to two spectacular children. In his free time, he enjoys competing in triathlons, reading, and exploring foreign languages. He is excited to further give back to the state that has afforded him innumerable privileges.