

Darin Dufault

Dr. Dufault and his wife grew up in Apex, North Carolina. Together, they have ties to all of North Carolina's ACC schools, he having received his undergraduate degree in Music at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, she her undergraduate degree in Zoology at North Carolina State University. Afterward, he went on to medical school at Wake Forest University. After six years of residency and fellowship in Charleston, South Carolina he returned to Durham. Dr. Dufault is an Associate Professor of Medicine at Duke University, where he is the Director of Third Space Endoscopy and Associate Vice Chief of Clinical Services for the Division of Gastroenterology and Hepatology. Dr. Dufault and his wife have three children, including one set of twins, who happily fill all his free time. Dr. Dufault feels lucky to participate in an organization dedicated to the gastrointestinal care of North Carolina, the place that he has always called home.
